How Omaha dancers did crans their necks and stub their toes last evening at the Fontenelle when Mr. Donald Brian appeared in their midst and executed a few little fancy steps! Mr. Brian, who is an old friend of Miss ugenic Whitmore, took supper with her, and her father after the performance last evening. Miss Whitmore met the dancer at a wonderful ball in Chicago a number of years ago. Later she saw him again in New York and now she is having the great pleasure of renewing the acquaintance. This evening Miss Whitmore will have a few friends informally, to meet Mr. few friends informally to meet Mr.

Brian is so much more used to stage dancing than to the ballroom art that he unconsciously invented fancy steps which were the envy of all the supper crowd at the hotal. War relief work in Omaha in attracting interest more than ever since the prospect of war is so near. People who cared very little for the relief of Belgian and French sufferers are being inspired to add their help when they know that the bandages and pillows may need to be used for wounded American soldiers. The work of the society will continue until June 1 and may be extended throughout the summer.

A recent visitor to Chicago met a former Omaha woman who is engaged in Red Cross work. The Chicago woman said: "Oh, you're not loing any relief work in Omaha this rear, are you?" In reply her former Omaha friends compiled a list of their accomplishments on behalf of the National Surgical Dressing association. This list presented the imposing total of 30,059 articles made between November 15, 1916, and March 10, 1917.

When the Animals Speak

By GARRETT P. SERVISS.

A magnificent African lion stood by

A magnificent African lion stood by the bars of his cage on a hot July day, looking out upon a scene which in some of its elements was well calculated to recall the country of his birth. If you doubt that animals have a sentiment corresponding to our amor patriae, love of the native land, that doubt would have faded as you watched this lion's eyes and noted his bearing.

In front of the cage, which was placed beneath the shade of a row of trees, extended a broad level space of, ground, covered with yellow sand and pebbles, gleaming in the sunshine, and beyond that rose other leafy trees intermingled with grassy glades and clumps of park shrubbery. The shadows projected across the wide, tawny expanse, and falling upon the green intervales among the trees were precisely such as might be seen in an African landscape, far from civilization, where the roar of a lion at night, beside some still pool reflecting the tropical stars, would have been amote accordant with the natural surroundings.

The lion stood erect, motionless, attentive, with a piercing but far-rang-ing look in his eyes. Before him, ing look in his eyes. Before him, their feet grating on the ocher-colored gravel, passed many two-legged curiosity seekers, staring, gaping, babbling, wondering. A mother lifted up her little girl that she might have a better view of "the dreadful yellow beast." A young woman shook her parasol before the lion's eyes with a delicious thrill of imaginary defiance, while her empty-faced escort struck a bold posture and tried, with voice and gesture, to draw the attention of the mane-crowned king to his insignificant person, swelling with insolent assumption of superiority. The lion looked straight over their heads and did not see them. Not the Hightest alteration occurred in his attitude or his gaze.

did not see them. Not the indicate alteration occurred in his attitude or his gaze.

Suddenly a flair, perhaps of human flesh, reached his nostrils. There was a little quiver of their delicate muscles, a just perceptible stiffening of his mighty fore limbs, a slight raising of the mane, and a movement of the tail. But the direction of his eyes did not change. His wild soul was wandering in Africa, beholding, under the stimulus of awakened memories, the scenes of his carly days.

Without warning, he lowered his head, and a deep, ground-shaking thunder-like growl issued from his throat. He looked at none of the suddenly cowering creatures before him; but they started back as if he had sprung at them. Women ran away acreaming, the girl with the parasol shrieked, her bold escort turned pale and nervously clutched her arm as they backed swiftly away fro. the cage. Perhaps there was a faint simile on the lion's broad face, but if so it was only a smile of contempt.

As he gave forth his voice, his mate, sooner than they have in Cuba and cause of the rebellion in Cuba and railroad disorders.

As he gave forth his voice, his mate, a beautifully formed lioness, who had been apparently sleeping in a corner, rose and softly advanced to his side. She rubbed against him as if in a caress, but he paid no attention. The far-off look was still in his eyes and his head was once more erect. She touched him again, and this time he instantly responded to her adtime he instantly responded to her advance, and their eyes met. They turned their backs to the crowd, which had now assembled in front of the cage, all alert with excitement, as the word flew from mouth to mouth: "The lion is roaring! Come quick! Look at him!"

In the meantime the lion and the lioness lay down side by side, and without a glance at the throng before the cage they fell into communion, in the feline tongue, which no man is yet wise enough to understand through his ears. The lion spoke first:

How New York City Is Meeting Its Food Problems

There was something terrible to all in the thought of the recent food riots in New York City—it brought somewhat closer to our comfortable doorsteps the fact of want and suffer-ing of which we have been vaguely conscious. It may be a relief to know that the city has actually done something, the food has been bought in huge quantities and placed on sale at very low figures. Further than that, the food committee is conduct-ing an educational campaign to instruct the people in the use of the foods which have been brought closer to their reach. For of the foods foods which have been brought closer to their reach. For of the foods which have been bought are to be found rice, hominy, corumed and Brazilian beans, one or all of which may be strange, hence undesirable, to the very poor, many of whom are foreigners. Thus the committee has published pamphlets marked, "Hang this in your kitchen," pamphlets which put forth in simple terms the value and use, of the new foods Simple recipes are included with easily understood directions. I notice that many of the recipes are combinathat many of the recipes are combina-tions with other foods, which might tempt the people to try them. The following is a reprint of one of the pamphlets:

THE Wonderlift Bandlet, an original Nemo invention, is the only supporting device in existence that LIFTS UP sagging flesh and automatically adjusts itself to the INDIVIDUAL needs of each wearer.

It provides a set of artificial muscles which do the necessary health-fashion work that weakened and relaxed abdominal muscles no longer can do. Thus it makes the figure smaller and neater at once; and (by passive massage) eventually tigher.
